[PostQ10b]

Please elaborate on your answer to question 10. This will help us to understand any changes in confidence that teacher candidates experience as a result of these case studies.

Total number of responses: 75

Example Responses:

- Enjoyed talking over the case studies (made a connection to real life)
- The resources are helpful
- I didn't really use social media until now, but now I think just the right amount of appropriate use can indeed be helpful.
- Perhaps touch more on how teacher candidates can hide their personal accounts online.
- I think we need to do more research into the policies and things online.
- A lot of grey area in the case study on what exactly the next steps of the teacher would be to handle the situation
- I think I still have more reading to do about this subject before I will feel fully confident with my digital footprint and what will be alright to post. However, I do feel more confident that I will be able to make informed decisions about my digital identity.
- I feel informed but unsettled in terms of what I can or can't do. I feel restricted.
- Decision-making is fluid and contextual.

- I'm just a bit more worried than I was before, to be honest
- I didn't like all of the online stuff. It was awkward for a presentation and not very fun.
- I have a better understanding of the mindful questions to continually be asking myself surround technology and digital practice.
- There were situations I was not aware of that made me think
- I'm more aware of what I don't know, and it's more terrifying.
- I realize now that anything you can imagine might happen, could happen! Plan for the worst and hope for the best. I'm going to update all my social media and ensure I continue to curate it ongoingly.
- The case study was very helpful in seeing what can actually happen and what to do about it
- Reading the case study made it easier to understand how being prepared and conscious of what you're doing while using digital media will prevent a lot of hardship.
- There are some difficult situations (by-stander) that will be hard to judge. The presentation sparked thinking, but provides no definite answer.
- Going thru the discussion questions helped to put the theory into virtual practice
- I have a better idea of everything that people will be considering, but it's still a minefield because it relies on other's perception of you, which will vary from person to person.
- I know this is a very important issue for new professionals today and this talk has inspired me to become more informed on the subject! Thank you!
- I feel like there are so many more issues around the use of social media than I had previously thought about, and I feel very unsure of how I should continue to use social media in the future.
- I think that I will be more confident in speaking up for myself in what I believe to be the right thing to do and less likely to "turn a blind eye" on questionable situations.
- I'm just nervous but better prepared!
- I learned how to perhaps own/defend my digital identity online, and also the practical factors that might make me fight my battles.
- It's more than just erasing social media presence. It's great to learn that we can successfully integrate professional life with social media.
- Unfortunately, this exercise takes the position of harm reduction. Rather, it would be useful to proceed from a place that empowers expression. Please remember that we belong, will belong, to a union that obligates us to provide an example of same.
