

SCENARIO 1

A graduating teacher candidate is required to create an ePortfolio to showcase her teaching competencies. This site will be used as a way to reflect on her development during the teaching program and the practicum in particular. She is planning to shoot a video of her class to post on her site as a way to showcase her skills. The site may be used after graduation to provide prospective employers with a more comprehensive view of the teacher in relation to her practice.

SCENARIO 2

A creative writing student has decided to develop an ePortfolio to begin showcasing her work and shaping her online identity. She would like this document to be viewed by prospective publishers and agents, but she would also like entries in the portfolio to help her gain an audience for her writing.

SCENARIO 3

A science grad is developing an ePortfolio to demonstrate his accomplishments in preparation for medical school. He wants to showcase his ability at translating scientific concepts into everyday language. He has experimented with video, audio and multimedia and wants to show what he has done.

SCENARIO 4

A communications major is developing an ePortfolio for his job search. He is saavy with social media and uses a variety of online tools to connect with others and build his networks. He is a good writer and wants to share his experiences with others. He wants to use his portfolio as a networking tool.

SCENARIO 5

An engineering student wants to use her ePortfolio as a way to showcase her work. She and her group mates have won some awards for some of their robotic models. She wants to document the process involved in developing these models and showcase them. She also wants to use the portfolio to document her experience as an engineering student.

SCENARIO 6

An arts student with a strong interest in photography is about to graduate and wants to develop in the area of photo-journalism. She is planning to travel overseas and visit several countries. She will document her journey with photographs. She wants her site to look clean and minimalistic showing her graphic style.

SCENARIO 7

An art student has recently been inspired by the act of collage making. He wants to showcase his work and document his experiments. He is involved in an art collective and wants to showcase work that he contributes to as a larger group. He also has an interest in music and is part of the alternative music scene in Vancouver.