FIRE talks are discussions for graduate students by graduate students, covering a broad array of topics, and sharing a common theme of making connections between research disciplines. Attendees share research, bring together different perspectives, and learn to effectively communicate ideas to different audiences. Each begins with brief grad student presentations on the topic; then transitions to a discussion on finding commonalities and differences between ideas and approaches.

For more information, or to submit your ideas for a presentation, visit: research.commonsonline.library.ubc.ca. To attend and participate in the FIRE talk discussion WITHOUT presenting, register at: elred.library.ubc.ca
